Liberal Media in Lockstep With Obama: Avoid The Words 'Radical Islamic Terrorism,' Demand More 'Gun Control'

Although there have been numerous deadly attacks by radical Islamists in the United States and in Europe over the last few years, the Obama administration and the liberal media are still unwilling to clearly describe what is going on, and they repeatedly promote the same failed, leftist solution: more gun control.

Radical Muslims are waging war against the United States, and also particularly against France, yet the White House refuses to use the words "radical Islamic terrorism," and the liberal media play along.

This happened with the Islamist attack in San Bernardino, Calif., on Dec. 2, in which 14 Americans were murdered and 22 were wounded. It was also the case with the fatal shooting at the recruiting station in Chattanooga, the Draw Muhammed contest, the New York subway hatchet attack, the Boston Marathon bombings, Fort Hood, and the Little Rock recruiting office shooting.

In those latter instances, 25 people were murdered and 220 wounded, and every killer was a radical Muslim. But the federal government and the liberal media chose to describe those acts variously as "workplace violence," "mass shooting," "gunmen," "terrorism," "violent extremism," and similar euphemisms.

The Media Research Center is documenting and exposing this liberal media deception through its various divisions, press releases, social media, and interviews of its expert staff on television and talk radio.

The San Bernardino attack illustrates well how the liberal media and leftist lawmakers work hand-in-hand to push their agenda. Let's look at some details.

Although the evidence in San Bernardino, even as the attack was unfolding, smacked of Islamic terrorism, President Barack Obama, the liberal media, and terrorapologists such as pro-extremist Muslim CAIR spun the story away from any mention of Islam.

One day after the attack, Obama couldn't decide if it might be "terrorist-related" or "it's possible this was workplace-related." He also claimed "we don't know" the killers' "motivations." If so, he's some

Commander-in-Chief. (It was quickly revealed that the terrorists Syed Farook and his bride from Pakistan, Tashfeen Malik, were hardcore Muslims who had been in regular contact with Islamic extremists.)

Echoing the administration, Mother Jones' Mark Follman told MSNBC's Chris Hayes that "the confluence of possible motive here is really fascinating," and "this may have been some kind of workplace violence."

CAIR said it was waiting "to know the real motives." Hayes himself then chimed in, "we don't know the motives," and wondered if motivation ultimately is "fundamentally unknowable?"

The next day, the Washington Post was claiming "motive elusive in deadly California rampage," and the Wall Street Journal was singing the same tune, "California shooters leave clues, but no clear motive."

Deflecting further, CNN analyst Tom Fuentes claimed that the attack on the San Bernardino health department facility seemed more like "a domestic militia group, an anti-government domestic militia group." Another CNN analyst Harry Houck surmised, "It could be some right-wing group." Some analysts.

Not a peep that it possibly – just maybe! – could be radical Islamists.

CNN contributor Casey Jordan argued that the "disgruntled employee" [Syed Farook] who had a "Middle Eastern" name may have been "offended" by the "holiday party," that it was a "grudge" and designed to "look like terrorism."

To further distract from radical Islamic terror in California, the liberal media ran stories about the dangers of "anti-Muslim rhetoric." NBC's Andrea Mitchell fretted that such talk had reached a perilous pitch.

Her colleague Chuck Todd warned of "Islamophobia," and predicted "it's going to get ugly." The New York Times blamed "anti-Muslim remarks" of Donald Trump and Ben Carson for an "escalation in hateful episodes" against U.S. Muslims.

Ironically, MSNBC's Melissa Harris-Perry fumed that The Times ran a photo of Islamic terrorist Tashfeen Malik wearing a hijab, railing that it was sending a message that "this is what terrorism looks like."

On Dec. 6, Obama told America that the San Bernardino killers "had gone down the dark path of radicalization" and had embraced "a perverted interpretation of Islam" – but they were not "radical Islamists"!

Deflecting from any hint of radical Islam the day of the San Bernardino killings, CNN's Tom Fuentes claimed it could be "an anti-government domestic militia group," and CNN's Harry Houck thumped,

"It could be some right-wing group, for all I know."

He then again pushed for more "gun-safety measures" and restrictions on "assault weapons."

The liberal media obediently parroted the president.

The New York Times ran a front-page editorial slamming gun-rights advocates and calling for gun confiscation. NBC's Today praised the editorial in two stories; CBS This Morning gave it nearly 3 minutes of coverage.

Univision's Jorge Ramos lumped the Islamist attack in with "a pattern now of mass shootings" – not an act of war – and then called for repealing the 2nd Amendment.

ABC's Jon Karl noted that, "before knowing anything about the shooters or how they got their weapons," Obama "said it is time for Congress to pass tougher gun laws."

NBC's Luke Russert relayed Hillary Clinton's tweet, "we must take action to stop gun violence now." Even liberal dinosaur Dan Rather posted on Facebook, "When will we as a nation, finally decide to take action? What will it take?"

The liberal media have unapologetically adopted the left's anti-Second Amendment agenda in the wake of San Bernardino. Our country is under attack and they want us unarmed.

And, they're apologists for radical Islam. They claim that even mentioning "Islam" will create a backlash and sprout new jihadists, and then they say radical Islamic terrorism has absolutely nothing to do with Islam. In other words, don't mention Islam or Muslims, or you're an Islamophobic bigot.

The MRC is documenting and exposing this journalistic subterfuge every day, and delivering the truth to millions of Americans 24/7.

LIBERAL MEDIA STOOP TO NEW LOW

Mock Conservatives and People of Faith for Offering Prayers for San Bernardino Terrorist Victims

One of the leftist media's most anti-religious and repulsive instances of bias occurred the day after Islamic terrorists slaughtered 14 people in San Bernardino, Calif. On that day, the New York Daily News mocked – on its front page! – conservative lawmakers who had expressed compassion and offered prayers for the victims and their families.

Making the situation more revolting, numerous journalists at CNN, NBC, and CBS applauded the Daily News and repeatedly broadcast its nauseating cover for two days.

The Daily News' massive front-page headline on Dec. 3 read, “GOD ISN'T FIXING THIS,” and included pictures and tweets by Ted Cruz, Rand Paul, Lindsey Graham, and Paul Ryan expressing their condolences and “prayers.”

The New York Daily News' cover ridiculed conservatives who offered prayers for the San Bernardino Islamist terror victims, a mocking that was applauded and given wide coverage by liberal reporters at CNN, NBC and CBS.

The sub-headline read, “As latest batch of innocent Americans are left lying in pools of blood, cowards who could truly end gun scourge continue to hide behind meaningless platitudes.”

The MRC quickly called out the Daily News and its “offensive and disgraceful” cover. In a press release that morning, MRC President Brent Bozell said, “For a major city newspaper to use their front page to mock people who are praying after what happened yesterday is unconscionable and unbecoming a publication that purports to be a serious media outlet.”

Bozell then called on the publisher of the Daily News to 1) apologize not just to the GOP presidential candidates and Speaker of the House but every person of faith it offended; 2) fire the person responsible for approving the front page story immediately; and 3) launch an investigation into the personnel and policies that allowed this to happen so that it never happens again.

“If the news media want to be atheists, that’s their business,” said Bozell. “But how dare they now ridicule people of faith. This kind of anti-religious bigotry is precisely what fuels Islamic terrorists’ hatred toward Americans.”

The liberal media, however, were giddy. On CBS This Morning, co-anchor Gayle King declared, “I thought that headline was very powerful.” Forever-liberal Charlie Rose thundered, “We have to do something. As the New York Daily News said, God is not going to fix it. We have to fix it.”

One of the more despicable comments was spewed by Gene Weingarten of the Washington Post: “Dear ‘thoughts and prayers’ people: Please shut up and slink away. You are the problem, and everyone knows it.”

In TV appearances on Fox’s Varney & Co. and the Fox Business Network, Bozell blasted the anti-religious bigots in the liberal media for their “vicious, vicious attacks” on conservatives and for “ridiculing people of faith.”

“America offers prayerful comfort to the victims and the media ridicule it,” said Bozell. “The news media’s values are repulsive.”

Brent Bozell’s statement about the Daily News was also distributed to the MRC Action Team and seen by more than 2 million people on social media and cable television. His interviews on Fox about the scandal can be viewed at MRC.org and at NewsBusters.

One of the more despicable comments was spewed by Gene Weingarten of the Washington Post: “Dear ‘thoughts and prayers’ people: Please shut up and slink away. You are the problem, and everyone knows it.”

Bits & Pieces

Although two former FBI agents explained how Tashfeen Malik had been radicalized into an Islamic terrorist, CNN's Erin Burnett didn't like that answer and asked if "something else" could have been a trigger, such as "post-partum psychosis."

'Post-Partum' Islamic Terror?

Desperate to find any reason for the San Bernardino terrorist attack except radical Islam, CNN's Erin Burnett went so far beyond reality to suggest it might have been caused by "postpartum psychosis." Yes, she said that. On CNN Live, after two former FBI agents explained in detail how the female terrorist, Tashfeen Malik, had been radicalized and extensively trained, Burnett wasn't satisfied.

She implored, "I just have to ask you, could there be something else, anything else, that could have explained her involvement? Something like a postpartum psychosis?" One of the former agents then carefully explained that "postpartum psychosis" is "typically internal," and the "violence goes internally." The other agent also noted that Malik "clearly had advanced [terrorist] training and clearly lots of it."

On the same day of Burnett's report, Dec. 4, CNN.com had reported that Malik had "pledged allegiance to ISIS" on Facebook, a fact that Burnett apparently missed.

Worshipping Obama

Although nearly all observers panned President Barack Obama's passionless speech from the White House about the San Bernardino terrorist attack, CNN's Fareed Zakaria swiftly ran to Obama's rescue. On CNN Live, host Don Lemon asked Zakaria for his view on Obama's approach versus that of Donald Trump.

Smiling, Zakaria pontificated, "in some ways, it was vintage Obama" because "the way he views it, people like Donald Trump are playing with fire and he is the fireman." Obama "is the guy who's going to douse those flames," swooned Zakaria. Obama is "cool, measured," the "adult" who doesn't "get hysterical." Zakaria added that Obama's logic "may be too cool for some people." Or maybe just too vacuous?

CNN's Fareed Zakaria bubbled with enthusiasm in defending President Obama's passionless speech about the San Bernardino terrorism, swooning that Obama is "cool, measured," the "adult" in the room, and who "may be too cool for some people."

WHAT VOTE?

In a historic vote on Dec. 4, the U.S. Senate passed (52-47) a bill that would repeal major parts of Obamacare and end all federal funding to Planned Parenthood, but ABC, CBS, and NBC didn't report it. The three major broadcast news networks said nothing. The bill is now in the House for mark-up and then a vote, where it is expected to pass and then go to President Obama's desk.

While the networks said nothing about the Senate vote, that Friday morning they did report on news crucial to their leftist agenda. CBS This Morning, for instance, disappointingly relayed that "Senate Republicans [had] rejected new gun control legislation." Although the networks censored the Senate vote on Planned Parenthood, they did extensively cover the shooting at the Colorado Springs Parenthood facility. They have their priorities.

As Bigoted as ISIS?

New York Daily News columnist Linda Stasi let all her left-wing, anti-Christian venom spew in a piece following the San Bernardino Islamic terrorist attack by claiming one of the Christian victims was just as “bigoted” and “hate-filled” as the jihadist killers. The headline ran, “San Bernardino Killers Were ISIS-Loving Monsters -But One of Their Victims Was Just as Bigoted.”

Linda Stasi said the terrorist Syed Farook was “radicalized” by his online bride, but the victim, Nicholas Thalasinis, was “a radical Born Again Christian/ Messianic Jew”

Linda Stasi, New York Daily News columnist

who wrote “frightening, NRA-loving, hate-filled screeds on Facebook.” He was “a hate-filled bigot,” railed Stasi, who added that Thalasinis was “inaccurately being eulogized as a kind and loving man.”

Despite the evidence of the killers’ connection to ISIS, Stasi claimed an argument between Farook and Thalasinis – “two hate-filled, bigoted municipal employees” – led to the deaths of 14 innocent people.

Guns & Slaves

Apparently unaware of U.S. Supreme Court rulings confirming an individual’s right to keep and bear arms under the 2nd Amendment, The Daily Beast’s Chris Dickey, a veteran of Newsweek and the Washington Post, furiously tried to tie gun ownership to slave ownership. In a December article, “The U.S. ‘Right’ to Own Guns Came With the ‘Right’ to Own Slaves,” Dickey relied heavily on the serial fiction writer Charles Dickens.

During an 1842 book tour of America, Dickens, as paraphrased by Dickey, saw that “people who owned slaves wanted to carry guns to keep blacks intimidated and docile.” Dickey then wildly claimed the 2nd Amendment “was essentially written to protect the interest of Southerners” to crush slave revolts, and “to keep slaves in slavery, you needed militias and they needed to be armed. Such is the fundamental ‘right’ assured by the Second Amendment.”

That’s journalism today: relying on a 19th century British novelist as a source on U.S. constitutional law.

Minibits

■ For governors who oppose more Syrian refugees, MSNBC’s Mika Brzezinski rants, “they’re being incredibly stupid and hateful, and I think destructive.”

■ MSNBC’s Chris Matthews challenges the ethnicity of Ted Cruz and Marco

Rubio: “I’m not sure the right word is Hispanic for them, because they are Cuban nationals or whatever, or come from Cuba.” ■ Former ABC anchor Charlie Gibson reassures us, “I don’t think there’s anything to Benghazi and I don’t think there’s anything to the e-mails. I’m sick of hearing about them. I don’t think there’s anything to this.” ■ CNN’s Marc Lamont Hill spreads his leftist propaganda, “The greatest lie in American history is the myth of the self-made person. Nobody makes themselves. We’re all shaped by communities, by people who struggled and sacrificed for us, by governments that offer safety nets.” ■ Carl Bernstein rallies to Hillary Clinton’s defense over the Benghazi hearing, “I think you have to go back to Joe McCarthy, to the House Un-American Committee, to find a process as abusive in a congressional hearing as this one was. This was a reckless and outrageous hearing.” ■ HuffPo’s Howard Fineman agrees that Tea Party conservatives are just like ISIS, “Yes! Yes! That’s a very good analogy! Without the violence, obviously, but yes, they are a rejectionist front.”

The New York Times Book Review Cheaters

The Bible is the best-selling book of all time, but The New York Times would have to consign it to the ghetto for “Advice, How-To, and Miscellaneous” books. That’s what the Gray Lady has done to David Limbaugh and his new book, The Emmaus Code: Finding Jesus in the Old Testament.

Paul Bedard at the Washington Examiner revealed that on the newspaper’s November 29 best-seller chart, the Times didn’t put David Limbaugh’s book at number 8 on the nonfiction list, where it belonged. They set it aside in the “Advice, How-To, Miscellaneous” category.

Even there, the Times played games, Bedard reported. “In the most recent week, the Regnery-published book sold 9,642 copies. The New York Times best-seller list for advice put it at No. 5 even though it out-sold No. 4, ‘Big Magic,’ by 3,533 copies.”

Who needs math?

It’s also strange that Extreme Ownership by Jocko Willink and Leif Babin is on the nonfiction best-seller list, although the Times describes it as “applying the principles of Navy SEALs leadership training to any organization.” That sounds like an advice book.

Bedard also blew the whistle on the Times Book Review a year ago when Limbaugh’s first book on Christian apologetics debuted. They “banished conservative legal author David Limbaugh’s latest, Jesus on Trial, from its upcoming best-seller list despite having sales better than 17 other books on the list.”

Bedard also exposed the Times playing this game of “hide the conservative best-seller” with Dinesh D’Souza’s book America, a companion to his documentary of the same name.

This doesn’t even consider the Times actually reviewing a Limbaugh book. The Book Review crew beclowned themselves in September by assigning a reviewer to the latest book by that literary giant Kim Kardashian. It was titled Selfish, a picture book of her own selfies. But they never found someone to write about Mark Levin’s Plunder and Deceit as it sat in second place on the Nonfiction best-sellers list.

Not every best-seller gets a Times review, but it’s not hard to see the favoritism on any list. Books by liberal journalists Jon Meacham and Ted Koppel are reviewed, as are books by leftist radicals Gloria Steinem and Ta-Nehisi Coates. GOP presidential contenders Donald Trump and Ben Carson don’t get book reviews, and neither do Fox News hosts Bill O’Reilly and Brian Kilmeade. The reviews of conservative best-sellers would probably be vicious, but they might still be seen by the Times as a mistake – for suggesting the books matter.

This also happens with books on God and Godlessness. A best-selling book on the Salem Witch trials is reviewed, but not David Limbaugh analyzing the Bible. The tastemakers at the Times have no interest in studying the Bible like a believer, exploring the old maxim of St. Augustine that “in the Old Testament, the New Testament is concealed; in the New Testament, the Old Testament is revealed.”

Instead, the Times assigned a review of Battling the Gods: Atheism in the Ancient World, by Tim Whitmarsh – not a best-seller, but pleasing fare for the secular fundamentalists. Reviewer Rebecca Newberger Goldstein blithely stated: “In the grip of religious conviction, a person will commit acts too horrific to otherwise contemplate.”

The Times doesn’t find the Bible to be a “good book,” so they can play cheating games with their best-seller list. They surely ignore Proverbs 19, which begins, “Better is the poor that walketh in his integrity, than he that is perverse in his lips, and is a fool.”
